TODAY 12:30: Minnesota Indigenous and Advocacy Leaders to Take Action in Continued Call on Governor Dayton to Stop Line 3
Leaders Will Escalate Ongoing Campaign Against Line 3, Call for Immediate Action to Stop the Tar Sands Pipeline

Bemidji, MN -- Today, Native and non-Native leaders will be joined by national environmental advocates to take escalated action in the Bemidji area to urge Governor Mark Dayton to act immediately to stop Enbridge's Line 3 tar sands pipeline.

At the same time, a group will gather at the governor's office with live-streamed video of the action to send a clear message to Governor Dayton that now is the time to act to stop the pipeline.

WHO: Faith leaders; Youth Climate Intervenors; local environmental and Indigenous advocates; and national representatives from the Sierra Club.

Available for Comment:

- Winona LaDuke, Executive Director, Honor the Earth
- Loren Blackford, President, Sierra Club
- Margaret Levin, Director, Sierra Club North Star Chapter
- Kevin Whelan, Executive Director, MN350
- Julia Frost Nerbonne, Executive Director, MN Interfaith Power and Light
- Akilah Sanders Reed, Youth Climate Intervenor
- And others

WHEN: TODAY, Wednesday, August 29 at 12:30pm CT

WHERE: Intersection of 3rd St. NW and Beltrami Ave NW, Bemidji, MN

Livestream available here. Photos will be available to media following the action

WHY: Enbridge's Line 3 pipeline threatens Minnesota's land, clean water, and manoomin (wild rice) beds. The project has been permitted against the desires of four Tribal governments, and would be a disaster for our climate. Last month, the MN Public Utilities Commission approved the pipeline, ignoring the recommendations of the MN Department of Commerce, Office of Administrative Hearings, Pollution Control Agency, and Department of Natural Resources and siding with a foreign pipeline company. The approved route would cross through critical ecological and cultural resources. Governor Dayton has so far failed to take action, but he can still act to stop this pipeline. Minnesotans, national environmental advocates, and Indigenous leaders are standing together to send a clear message to Governor Dayton that this fight is far from over and it's time to step up and take immediate action to stop Line 3.

Sgt. Jahnke,

I look forward to meeting you and others on October 22. I noticed something that caught my attention almost immediately on the schedule; the Line 3 Pipeline Protests.

Unsure if Will filled you in but I was the lead tactical analyst for the North Dakota State and Local Intelligence Center (NDSLIC/Fusion Center) during the Dakota Access Pipeline Protests and would love to assist on that presentation if there is any interest in supplying background and I still have a good amount of my files from the event. I was in the Tactical Operation Center in addition to the Special Emergency Operation Center for the entirety of the event. A majority of the protestors here were our left overs from DAPL after we evicted the camps.

Let me know if this is something that interests you and we can chat.

Very excited to meet you all next week regardless,

CODY LARSON

Bemidji Line 3 pipeline protest indicates renewed opposition after regulatory approval

6min 26sec

About 50 environmentalists marched down 3rd Street in downtown Bemidji Wednesday afternoon, linking arms across the intersection at Beltrami Avenue to stop traffic.

They said they were there to get the attention of Gov. Mark Dayton — hoping he would do something to halt the progress of Enbridge Energy's Line 3 oil pipeline replacement project, which has been winding its way through the regulatory process for years.

- Podcast: Rivers of Oil

They brought signs, they chanted and, in many ways, it looked like a typical protest: Demonstrators marching, some anticipating they'll perform civil disobedience, and some knowing they might be arrested for it.

But many of the environmentalists linking arms across the intersection in downtown Bemidji weren't accustomed to this type of protest.

The Rev. Dwight Wagenius came up from Minneapolis to be there. He's chair of the climate action group Minnesota Interfaith Power and Light and a minister at Mayflower Church in Minneapolis.

"We're all about justice," Wagenius said. "Climate justice. Environmental justice. Economic justice. Racial justice. Those are all moral issues."

Leaders across cultures, faiths, and organizations come together to send a message on the Line 3 pipeline project. Monika Lawrence for MPR News

Wagenius is 76. And he's never been arrested, he said. Once, he said, he attended a prayer vigil that was tangentially connected to Standing Rock, but that's the closest he's gotten to an actual protest.

Today, he said, Line 3 has become a big enough threat to the environment, he had to do something.

The protest in Bemidji was the first major, coordinated action by environmental and tribal groups since the Minnesota Public Utilities Commission approved a certificate of need and a route permit for Line 3 in June, and it signaled that opponents will likely continue to fight the pipeline despite the state's conditional approval.

Protest signals opponents will continue to fight

Dayton declined to comment specifically on Wednesday's protest. Instead, his office referred to a statement he released after the PUC vote, in which he said that decision is not the final approval of Line 3.

"Rather, it only allows Enbridge to begin to apply for at least 29 required federal, state, and local permits," he said, adding that construction on Line 3 cannot begin until it receives those permits.

Wagenius and other Minnesota clergy and Native American and environmental activists were joined Wednesday afternoon by representatives from the Sierra Club, including the group's president, Loren Blackford.

"Our belief is that fossil fuels should stay in the ground," Blackford said. "So we are fighting pipelines in different places across the country. Through legal action. Through working with local communities like we're doing here."

In its 120-year history, the Sierra Club's leadership has only encouraged this kind of civil disobedience three times.

The first was five years ago, when club representatives handcuffed themselves to a White House fence to protest the Keystone XL pipeline. The second was in 2016, in support of voting rights. The third was Wednesday, in Bemidji.

"It's because of a sense of urgency," Blackford said. "We don't have a lot of time left to make the transition from fossil fuels to clean energy."

• Previously: Opponents of Enbridge Line 3 pipeline project file appeal

Bemidji Police and Beltrami County Sheriff's deputies issued dispersal orders several hours into the protest. An estimated 25 protesters — including Wagenius and Blackford — were cited for disorderly conduct before the street was cleared. No arrests were made.

In a statement Wednesday, Enbridge said it respected people's right to express their views in accordance with the law. "The best way to protect Minnesota's environment and ensure we get the energy we use in the state is to replace Line 3," the company said.

Line 3 process continues with required plans and permits

Dawn Goodwin from White Earth, whose Ojibwe name is Everlasting Wind, is "here today to let Governor Dayton know how important our wild rice and our water is to us and we don't want Line 3 in our territory which is 1855 Treaty territory." Monika Lawrence for MPR News

Enbridge is still waiting for a final written order from the Public Utilities Commission, and is collecting additional information and data, before it submits state and federal permit applications.

It's also working to satisfy several conditions the commission imposed on the company when it approved the controversial pipeline.

For example: Enbridge must provide insurance and a guarantee that it would pay for environmental cleanup in case of a spill. The company also must provide a trust fund to pay for the removal of the Line 3 pipeline when it's eventually decommissioned.

Enbridge has also agreed to take out the old pipeline for any landowners who want it removed after the replacement line is built.

- Before bringing in bulldozers: Line 3 still has regulatory ground to plow

The company is still providing details for those plans, some of which have been coolly received by some of the parties involved in the proceedings. The Minnesota Department of Commerce, for example, said in a filing that Enbridge's insurance coverage isn't adequate, a claim the company disputes.

Enbridge said it expects the PUC to release a final written order in September, which should "provide more clarity and direction on a few of the items," said Enbridge spokesperson Lorraine Little.

Appeals in motion, route pending

Participants of the Line 3 protest in Bemidji express their opinion that another oil pipeline is not wanted in Minnesota. Monika Lawrence for MPR News

Meanwhile, two environmental groups and four Native American tribes have appealed the approval the PUC granted in the spring for the major environmental review of Line 3.

Those cases raise several issues: They allege the review did not consider the possibility that additional pipelines could eventually be built in the new corridor, and did not sufficiently analyze the impacts of potential oil spills along the route.

The PUC also still has to approve a final route for the pipeline.

The Fond du Lac Band of Lake Superior Chippewa is deciding whether it would prefer to have the new line built across its reservation — along which the current route runs — or have it built off the reservation but on 1854 treaty land, where the tribe retains rights to hunt, fish and gather.

• Out of the spotlight: Tribes keep fighting Dakota pipeline

The Fond du Lac Band is also overseeing completion of a survey of major tribal cultural sites along the proposed route, which needs to be completed before construction can begin.

Enbridge said it expects that survey to be completed sometime this fall.

Assuming the company receives all the permits it needs, and isn't derailed by any lawsuits, Enbridge plans to begin construction on Line 3 in the first quarter of 2019.

SUBJECT: SRF Cut Team Training

On December 5th 2018, Special Operations has requested that all members of the Cut Team report to HCSO Patrol HQ for a 4 hour training event. This training will, once again, focus on the fundamental aspects of responding to potential protestor activity. Cut team members are requested to report to Patrol HQ by 0800. It is anticipated this training event will conclude at 1200.

Attendance for this event is mandatory, unless excused in advance by a Team Supervisor.

The uniform of the day will consist of the black Cut Team uniform. Those of you who are assigned a portable radio please bring it. There will be no need to bring assigned riot gear. As always, please be prepared for the possibility of inclement weather conditions.

Reminder: CUT team training is funded out of divisional / unit budgets. I have also attached a very brief overview of the day's activities. Please keep in mind this schedule is subject to change, depending on the day's activities.

If you should have any additional questions or concerns, I may be contacted @ [REDACTED]

Activities will consist of the following:

08:00- Arrive at ESD Patrol HQ.

08:00- Brief review of Enbridge (Line-3) protest activity

08:30- Equipment inventory and protest device extractions

11:30- Clean-up

12:00 Clear Training
